

ANNOUNCER: Why do those Americans most passionate about protecting our environment refuse to talk about overpopulation, fueled by too much immigration? Even though they know it's a major cause of environmental degradation.

Sierra Club legend David Brower said environmentalists must address immigration. So did the founder of Earth Day, Gaylord Nelson and John Muir, founder of the modern environmental movement.

This year, our population will hit three hundred million, five hundred million in about fifty years, mostly due to immigration and births to immigrants. Imagine the environmental impact of that many people! It's a subject that even the most socially sensitive must address.

We are Californians for Population Stabilization, a Santa Barbara based group educating Americans about the environmental impact of immigration-driven overpopulation. All we're asking for is an honest and logical discussion before it's too late. Contact us at capsweb.org to get more information. An honest discussion; is that asking too much?
