

Earth's Environmental Crisis

Finally, Americans are waking up to the Earth's environmental crisis. But it's way past time to do something about it here in California. No state has experienced environmental damage like California and no state has experienced higher population growth than California. The inconvenient truth is that population growth and environmental degradation go hand in hand. Since 1974, California's population has increased 39%. And overall energy consumption is up 35%. By 2050 population will reach the 60 million mark.

Wake up California. People drive cars, use water, create sprawl, destroy forests, and pollute. And California's population growth is almost all due to immigration and immigrant births. So if we are going to do our share to save the earth, our high immigration levels must be greatly reduced. That's a tough pill for compassionate Californians to swallow. But swallow it we must. We're Californians for Population Stabilization and we have answers. Visit us at capsweb.org. Saving earth starts here in California.
